MSEA Human and Civil Grant Guidance

The absence of social justice results in social oppression. Racism, sexism, ageism, classism, ableism, and heterosexism are some forms of social oppression in society. Societies and individuals form hierarchies of oppression in which certain types of oppression are addressed and others are not. Oppression of certain groups or individuals can result in social or legal exclusion, discrimination, inequitable distribution of resources, and emotional and physical consequences.¹

Strategies

- Raising awareness of the diversity in communities is critical to fostering social justice.
- Addressing real consequences of oppression—when discussing social justice in lessons or staff meetings, it is important to acknowledge the real social and economic disadvantages that oppressed people face in society, not simply the psychic harm of oppression.
- Promoting understanding of the mechanisms that perpetuate oppression—i.e., those attitudes and behaviors (e.g., racism, sexism, ageism, heterosexism) from a position of privilege.
- Resisting hierarchies of oppression by forming/developing strategies to foster justice with an inclusive mindset: who is being left out?
- Planning lessons/activities/events that seek to address social justice on three levels—personal (self), institutional (school) and societal (community).
